Help on how to talk to children about a cancer diagnosis which can have a profound impact on an entire family. There is a lot of new information to learn, treatment decisions to make, including your children in the process is beneficial to the entire family.

Set the tone. How you talk to your children is as important as what you tell them. Use a calm, reassuring voice, even if you become sad. This will help children see how you are trying to cope and will help them do the same. All feelings are OK. Don't be afraid to show emotions in front of your kids. Parents help to model that it is ok for children to have emotions and can model ways to cope with challenging emotions.

Give your children accurate, age-appropriate information about cancer. Don't be afraid to use the word "cancer." Tell or show them where the cancer is. A simple explanation is "cells that are fast growing and crowd out the good, healthy cells." Tell them cancer is not contagious. This will help reduce kids' fears about "catching" cancer.

Explain the treatment plan and how it will affect their lives. Tell children how you hope to get rid of cancer (i.e. surgery, radiation, chemotherapy, etc.) Prepare them for any physical changes expected during treatment (hair loss, extreme tiredness, or weight loss).

Reassure children that they will be cared for. Let them know that even if you can't always provide the care directly, their needs are important, they will be taken care of. Example, "Another family member / friend will take you to soccer instead of Mom for a little while."

Explain side effects Tell children about any side effects of treatment that you expect to happen. Preparing children for these side effects will help them understand what is happening. Often, children see the side-effects of treatment and conclude that you are getting sicker.

Answer children's questions as accurately as possible. Consider their age and prior experience with serious illness in the family. If you do not know the answer to a question, don't panic. It's ok to say, "I don't know. I will try to find out the answer and let you know."

Reassure children. Explain that no matter how they have been behaving or what they've been thinking, they did not do anything to cause the cancer.

Let them know they can turn to other members of your support system, too. These people include your spouse or partner, relatives, friends, clergy, teachers, coaches and members of your health care team. Let your children know that they can ask questions of these adults and talk to them about their feelings.

Allow children to participate in care. Give them age-appropriate tasks such as bringing you a glass of water or an extra blanket.

Encourage children to express their feelings. Share with them that they can express any feelings, even those that are uncomfortable. Let them know, too, that it's ok to say, "I don't feel like talking right now".

As always, show your children a lot of love and affection. Let them know that although things are different now, your love for them has not changed. Trust your sense of how to best support them during this difficult time.
